DIVERGENCES

Remember that everyone is unique and has their own way of behaving.

It's important to clarify our thoughts with a spirit of fraternal understanding — engaging in healthy debate is acceptable, but being needlessly provocative is not.

Systematically antagonizing others only breeds resentment.

You can disagree without offending by respecting your opponent's rights.

Try to remove aggressive language from your vocabulary.

As much as it happens to us, others want to be themselves in their commitments.

There are countless ways to support others without causing harm.

Typically, we don't argue with strangers, so why would we want to create conflict with loved ones?

It's crucial to prioritize peace and let go of trivial issues to remain faithful to what truly matters.

If someone believes that a stone is wood, it's respectful to accept their perspective. However, if someone uses a stone or wood to hurt another person, it's essential to address the inappropriateness of that harmful action.
